

Summary :

Manuel Maurozomes' rebellion broke out after Constantinople fell to the Latins (April 1204). Maurozomes, with the military support of the Sultanate of Ikonion, attempted to establish an independent rule in the region of Phrygia. In February/March 1206 his control over the areas of Laodikeia and Chonai was recognised by the emperor of Nicaea, Theodore I Laskaris.

1. Historical framework

The rebellion of Manuel Maurozomes was staged as soon as the Latin crusaders captured Constantinople for a second time (April 13, 1204) during the Fourth Crusade, and established Latin administration. Because the Latin rule was unwelcome to the citizens some members of the aristocracy escaped to free regions and created new states supported by the local populations. Theodore I Laskaris, the son-in-law of Alexios III Angelus (1195-1203), was at the time struggling to create in Asia Minor a new state in the area of Nicaea, aiming to continue the Byzantine Empire. As a result of the political instability in the free regions of the empire, several independent states were formed in the Byzantine provinces of Asia Minor. Theodore Mangaphas had imposed himself upon Philadelphia as an independent ruler, Sabas Asidenos in Samson, near Miletus, while in the same period Manuel Maurozomes was attempting to establish an independent rule in the region of Phrygia. The rebellion of the latter was also favoured by the restoration of Kaykhusraw I (1192-1196, 1204/5-1211) to the throne of the Sultanate of Ikonion. Manuel, who was a relative of the Seljuk sultan, found a loyal ally in his attempt to impose himself as an independent ruler in the area.

2. Manuel Maurozomes' rebellion

After Constantinople fell to the Latins (April 1204), Manuel Maurozomes (who had escaped from the city shortly before the fall) fled to Asia Minor, where he was arrested by the Byzantines of Nicaea. Maurozomes managed to get away and sought shelter in his son-in-law, Kaykhusraw I, who had just been restored to the throne of the sultanate of Ikonion.¹ With his support the rebel tried to establish an independent rule in the region of Phrygia and the Meander River. In 1204/5, helped by Türkmen nomads and Seljuk mercenaries of the sultan, Maurozomes looted and raided the valley of Meander, aiming to consolidate his position in Phrygia.

Maurozomes with his troops was a serious threat to Emperor Theodore I, who wanted to have absolute control over the Phrygian provinces, thus eliminating a possible attack from the Sultanate of Ikonion. In early 1205 Laskaris, who had imposed himself on Bithynia, turned against the revolter of Phrygia. At first he managed to restrict his activities, while towards the end of the same year he had to confront him once again. In a battle fought somewhere in Phrygia, the mercenaries of Maurozomes were dispersed, the leading beys were arrested and Maurozomes fled in disorder.² However, in February/March 1206, Theodore I, fearing for a Seljuk attack and having to deal with the invasion of David Komnenos (the brother of Alexios I Grand Komnenos, emperor of Trebizond) in Paphlagonia, the rebellions of minor local rulers as well as the constant attacks of the Latins of Constantinople against the provinces of western Asia Minor, was forced to come to terms with the Seljuk sultan. As part of that agreement, Laskaris recognised the independence of Maurozomes and gave him the command of the cities of Laodikeia and Chonai near Hierapolis. However, according to the conditions of the agreement, Manuel would be subjected to the sultan of Ikonion.³ The two cities remained under Maurozomes until his death, when they were incorporated into the Seljuk possessions.⁴

3. Consequences

Manuel Maurozomes rebelled when Constantinople was captured by the Latins and his movement became one of the most serious concerns of the new emperor of Nicaea, Theodore I Laskaris. As it happened with the rest of the separationist movements of the time, Maurozomes' rebellion caused problems for Theodore I in his attempt to establish a powerful state in NW Asia Minor. Things changed in the years of John III Vatatzes, when the latter adopted strict measures in order to reinforce the state power and control court aristocracy and provincial rulers, two of the major factors responsible for the emergence of separationist movements.

Glossary :

The title of bey means actually "chieftain," and was traditionally applied to leaders of Turkish tribal groups, in the Ottoman Empire also to administration or military officials. The regions or provinces where beys ruled or which they administered by them were called beylik.

Quotations

Byzantine historian Niketas Choniates describes the clash of the nicaean state against Manuel Maurozomes:

Ὁ μὲν γὰρ Μαυροζώμης Μανουὴλ τὸν Καίχοσρόην ὑποδύς, οὐ πάνυ πρὸ πολλοῦ τῆ σφετέρᾳ θυγατρὶ συναφθέντα καὶ τῆς Ἱκονιαρχίας αὐθις λαβόμενον, ἧς εἶχε πρότερον ἐκπεσών, πάντα ἦν μηχανώμενος, εἴ πως αὐτοῦ συναιρομένου τοῦ βασιλείου τύχη ὀνόματος, καὶ τὴν ὄσσην ποτίζει Μαϊάνδρος ἐπιών μετὰ Τούρκων ἔφθειρέ τε καὶ ἔκειρεν. Ὁ δὲ Λάσκαρις Θεόδωρος, ὡς γένει διαπρεπέστατος καὶ κήδει βασιλείῳ περιδοξος, ἀποκρουσάμενος ἐκείνον τὸ ἐξέρυθρον πέδιλον ὑποδύεται καὶ βασιλεὺς Ῥωμαίων ὑφ' ὅλων τῶν ἔρων ἀναγορεύεται πόλεων. Ὁ δ' ἐκ Κομνηνῶν Δαυὶδ στρατολογήσας Παφλαγόνας καὶ οἱ τὴν Ποντικὴν οἰκοῦσιν Ἡράκλειαν καὶ μοῖραν μισθωσάμενος Ἰβήρων τῶν πινόντων τοῦ Φάσιδος κώμας καὶ πόλεις ὑπεποιεῖτο καὶ τὸν οἰκείον μεγαλύνων κασίγητον, ᾧ ἡ κλησις Ἀλέξιος, πρόδρομος ἐκείνου καὶ προκήρυξ ἐγένετο. Ὁ δὲ ἔμελλεν αἰεὶ χρονίζων ἐν τοῖς τῆς Τραπεζούντος μέρεσι καὶ παροικιακὸς ἐδείκνυτο Ὑλας, φωνούμενος καὶ μὴ ὀπτανόμενος. Ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ τῆ Νικομήδους ὁ Δαυὶδ οὗτος προσεπέλασε διὰ τινος αὐτῷ στρατηγούντος μείρακος, Συναδηνοῦ τὴν ἐπίκλησιν, στρατεύμα ξυναγείρας ὁ Λάσκαρις κατ' αὐτοῦ ἔπεισι, διὰ μὲν τῆς τετριμμένης καὶ λείας ἔμφασιν δοὺς πορεύεσθαι, ἐκπεριελθὼν δὲ τραχείαν ἄλλην καὶ δύσβατον καὶ προσπεσῶν ἀφώρατος τῷ Συναδηνῷ. ὅθεν καταστρατηγήσας οὕτω τὸν νεανίαν αὐτόν τε συνείληφε καὶ τὸ ἐκείνου στρατεύμα διεσκέδασε καὶ τὸν Δαυὶδ μὴ περαιτέρω προῖέναι τῆς Ποντικῆς Ἡρακλείας παρέπεισε. Μετ' οὐ πολὺ δὲ καὶ τῷ Μαυροζώμῃ συμπλακεῖς φυγάδα δείκνυσι τοῦτον.

A panegyric of Niketas Choniates to Theodore I Lascaris, where he refers to his struggle against Murozomes as well:
