1. Life and Activity

Sabas Asidenos possibly lived in Sampson (ancient Priene), near Miletus. In 1204, after the fall of Constantinople to the Latins of the fourth Crusade, he temporarily established an independent rule in the valley of the lower Meander River around the administrative centre of Sampson. But towards the late 1205 or the early 1206 he had to recognise the dominion of Emperor Theodore I Laskaris (1204-1222) in the region,¹ at the same time maintaining the province under his command.

The relations between Asidenos and Theodore I Laskaris were later restored and the two men even became relatives: according to a document of the monastery of Xerochoraphion issued in 1213/1214, Asidenos appears to have got married to a member of the imperial family of the Laskarids and been awarded the high title of sebastokrator.² In the same period his landed property had acquired the status of episkepsis.

No more information is available about other activities of Sabas Asidenos. The last time his name was mentioned was in 1216 in a document of the Theotokos tou Stylou Monastery (St. Paul the Younger) of Mount Latros.³

Glossary :

	episkepsis, couratoria
(byz) The large imperial estates, namely "episkepsis" (under the episkepsites) or "curatoria" (under the curator), included settlements, arable lands, forests, aquifer, domestic animals and cattle. The episkepsis could be either autonomous or form parts of the curatoria, which were rather larger estates. Any autonomous episkepsis could become a private estate after an imperial donation.
	sebastokrator
Honorary title of the Byzantine court. The office was established in 1081 by Alexios I Komnenos for his elder brother Isaac, equivalent to the one of regent
